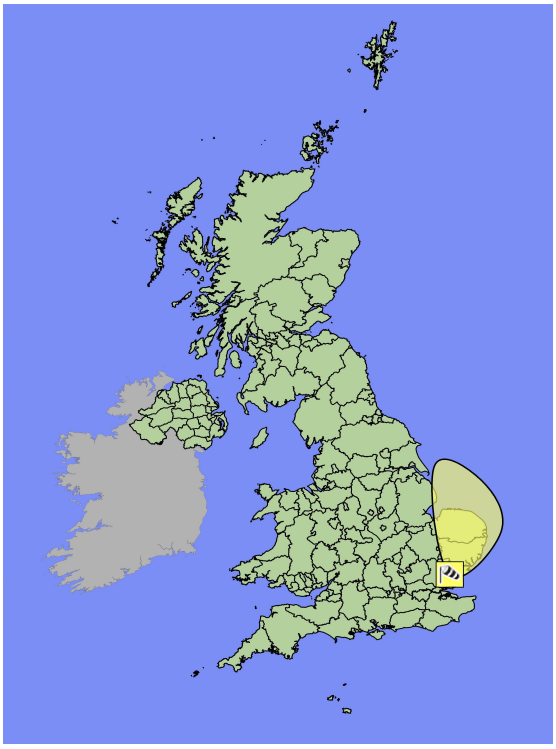
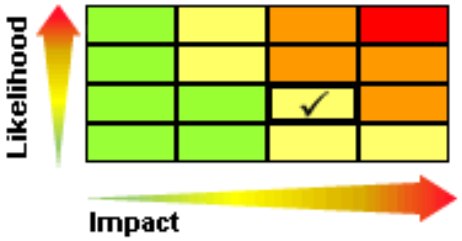
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
A deep depression will move northeast across England with strong winds developing along the southern and western flanks. The location of the strongest winds is subject to some uncertainty, though East Anglia and Channel coastal areas of Kent and Sussex look most vulnerable.

There is the potential for gusts in the range 50-70 MPH.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Wind

Valid from 00:00 on Sun, 25th Nov 2012 until 13:00 on Sun, 25th Nov 2012

Gale to severe gale force westerly or southwesterly winds are expected to set in suddenly across some southern parts of England overnight and into Sunday. The public should be aware of difficult driving conditions and risk of damage to trees.

The worst affected areas may be in East Anglia.
